WELLNESS HABITAT

Nowadays, most people have routines that involve spending around 78% of their time in enclosed spaces and buildings like homes or offices.

As a result, more than half of our time is spent indoors.

This is an important fact because it's also been proven that indoor air can be much more polluted than outdoor air with the air quality being up to 100 times worse due to humidity, CO2 emissions from people inside an enclosed space, poor ventilation, among other reasons.

At UMA Living Well, we are what we breathe. An adult inhales approximately 2,800 gallons of air per day. Paint in the interior walls of a house favor the synthesis of clean air and are the next step for human well-being.

At UMA Living Well we care about the health of our residents, that is why we will use organic paint with technology that eliminates 88.8% of contamination and 99.9% of the bacteria.
